Issue 25

No matter what program you are in, following @thel.eviathan on Instagram represents the single greatest way to take advantage of market inefficiencies.

Below is a sample post, made visible on February 27th. Let's go over the details because the terminology may reappear.

Red Niche Coins and Red Promissory Notes have a par value of $0, a dividend of $4, and a 1:2 stock split. To take advantage of the stock split, or ask questions about it, send an email to c.warrentaylor@nicheclinic.org

Par value is the final, future value of an asset. If you have a Red Niche Coin, and you hold it until Niche Night then you have $0. (Sometimes this is called "face value" because the value is stated on the front or face of the asset.)

Why in the world would you want a financial product with a future value of $0? You would want one if it pays a dividend!

A dividend is money you get just from holding an investment. This week, each Red Niche Coin or Red Promissory Note pays $4.

A stock split is when one stock becomes two stocks. In such cases, a stock usually drops in value by half, so no money is lost or gained. Half of $0 is still $0, but you have doubled your dividend!

Let's say you do not see a Niche Clinic staff member this week, but you want to take advantage of these selling opportunities. In such a case, just send an email to the address provided in the post!

Next week, readers should be ready for the UnSecurities UnProspectus for at least the Gold and Silver Niche Coins.
